stick in my mind about our class Looking back 50 over short years, these are a few of the things that ended, and left school 13 years later in 1958 -- before Viet Nam, hippies, discovered and polio would begin to be eradicated, and Sputnik was television and Howdy Doody were replacing radio, Salk vaccine was flower power, peace protesters, and the Beatles. It was at a time when launched to circle the Earth. We started Kindergarten in 1945, the year the Second World War skating to the strains of "The Old Lamp Lighter" and "Winter Wonderland." and the school grounds and town the morning after, hand-dipped ice cream get us there, the county fair, Elvis, Dick Clark, Wolfman Jack, Halloween at the school, our trip to New York City and struggling to raise the money to dances, sledding all winter in the Park (before they filled it in), game night teacher) jumping on his desk to make a point, holding round and square sundaes from Diaryland, backyard vegetable gardens, the Red Mill, and ice I remember 6-man football games, Tom Keenen (our esteemed history

A few quotes from the class stick out in my mind and they include:

Dick Spengler replied that he was "just a rose between two thorns." In English class, when asked to explain a commotion around his desk, cup handles Friends, Romans and countrymen - lend me your ears. I need them for tea Shakespeare, Ron Adams stood in the front of the room and quoted: Again in English class, when asked to recite a passage from

"At Van Rensselaer's funeral home." should have been and asked: And, in music class, Mrs. Bartow was reviewing the previous lesson Where does a body meet a body? The answer, as we all know, - comin' through the rye. But the answer she got was:

John Leyda, Terry Perkins, Dick Lecceardone, and Ron "Bud" West. were part of us and we miss them. We've lost a few good people along the way: Judy Parkhurst Pauley, didn't seem like a good thing then. grandfather's names - and phone numbers - and felt free to use them. It everybody not only knew your name, they knew your father's and I feel lucky to have grown up in a small, caring village, where

All in all, it was a good time.